PRLog (Press Release) – Aug 04, 2010 – SANTA CLARA, CA – Personal therapy counselor and two-time breast cancer survivor Jamie Inman will be joining the Breast Cancer Awareness Body Painting Project as a participant this year. The Breast Cancer Awareness Body Painting Project (BCAPP) is an ongoing series designed and created to raise awareness and funds for Breast Cancer causes such as the Kristy Lasch Miracle Foundation, which helps women under the age of 30 with medical related expenses who are battling breast cancer.

“Breast cancer hits women at the core of our femininity. Often stripped of breasts and hair, recovering our health requires not just mending our bodies, but restoring our confidence. The Breast Cancer Awareness Body Painting Project gives survivors a unique opportunity to reclaim our bodies and enjoy them as playful, powerful, sexy and beautiful. I am happy to promote the project for all survivors, and immensely proud to join as a participant.” Jamie Inman remarked about her participation in the body painting project.
